“Ghost Rider” is a story featuring two families. One family from 1855 becomes involved in helping escaped slaves make their way to Canada via the “Underground Railroad.” The other is a modern day family who has moved into the same house over 100 years later only to discover the house is being haunted by a young girl who died there during her escape. The story goes back and forth between the two time periods as the present day family learns more about their house and their “guest.”

“Ghost Rider” is a brand new play that gives SJRS a great opportunity to teach an important lesson in American history and exposes the racism that existed, yet it is written in a manner appropriate for all age levels. The play delivers a strong message in an entertaining and sometimes amusing way.
